

Fourteen years after the Gulf of Mexico oil spill, endemic fishes face an uncertain future

Apr 19, 2024 08:32AM

A study investigating the spill's impact on endemic fish species suggests potential loss of biodiversity.

The post Fourteen years after the Gulf of Mexico oil spill, endemic fishes face an uncertain future first appeared on Blog.

Deciphering cyrillics: revealing the myxomycetes of Ukraine from invisible sources

Apr 18, 2024 12:45PM

A new study compiles over 150 years of research on Ukraine's myxomycetes — amoebae that form fascinating fungi-like fruiting bodies.

The post Deciphering cyrillics: revealing the myxomycetes of Ukraine from invisible sources first appeared on Blog.

Man's best friend threatens endangered species' survival

Apr 17, 2024 09:40AM

Dog attacks on mountain tapirs in Colombia highlight a growing threat to vulnerable wildlife.

The post Man's best friend threatens endangered species' survival first appeared on Blog.

Potamophylax kosovaensis, a new insect species from Kosovo that is already endangered

Apr 16, 2024 03:48PM

The country's natural wealth is under threat by manmade pressures such as water pollution, littering, and the construction of hydropower plants.

The post Potamophylax kosovaensis, a new insect species from

Kosovo that is already endangered first appeared on Blog.

Leptanilla voldemort, a ghostly slender new ant species from the dark depths of the underground

Apr 15, 2024 08:26AM

Its name pays homage to the dark wizard Lord Voldemort, the fearsome antagonist of the Harry Potter series, drawing parallels with the ant's ghostly appearance.

The post Leptanilla voldemort, a ghostly slender new ant species from the dark depths of the underground first appeared on Blog.

NOAA Fisheries Zoologist Describes New Fish Species

Apr 10, 2024 09:32AM

Dr. Katherine Bemis of the National Systematics Laboratory recently helped describe a new species of fish, the papillated redbait.

The post NOAA Fisheries Zoologist Describes New Fish Species first appeared on Blog.

Pensoft took a BiCIKL ride to Naturalis to report on a 3-year endeavour towards FAIR data

Apr 9, 2024 04:03PM

Three years ago, the BiCIKL consortium took to traverse obstacles to wider use and adoption of FAIR and linked biodiversity data.

The post Pensoft took a BiCIKL ride to Naturalis to report on a 3-year endeavour towards FAIR data first appeared on Blog.

Exploring 'sufficiency': an overlooked strategy for protecting biodiversity?

Apr 2, 2024 06:41AM

Decision makers are urged to re-evaluate their priorities.

The post Exploring 'sufficiency': an overlooked strategy for protecting biodiversity? first appeared on Blog.

Melting glaciers provide new ground for invasive species

Apr 1, 2024 11:32AM

A case study on the island of South Georgia.

The post Melting glaciers provide new ground for invasive species first appeared on Blog.

Orchard meadows: reviving Europe's forgotten landscapes

Mar 29, 2024 09:34AM

Researchers call for political and public support to protect these areas.

The post Orchard meadows: reviving Europe's forgotten landscapes first appeared on Blog.
