NOW GO GET HIRED!

Ready to start your job hunt? We'd like to leave you with a few tips to give you a leg up on the competition:

- Check job sites every day. Find your favorites, and then make it a habit to look at them every morning—even if you already have work. This will help reduce the amount of downtime you have between projects.
- Don't rely on the Internet alone. Not only is it good for your mental well-being to get out of the house regularly, you'll uncover different opportunities by networking within real-world communities. Often, you'll only be facing local candidates as competition rather than the entire Internet.
- Proofread your application materials. You've likely looked over your resume with a fine-toothed comb, but many applicants make last-minute tweaks to their cover letters and inadvertently include typos. Even a single error can rule you out very early in the hiring process with many companies.
- Use multiple search terms. By trying closely related terms, you can uncover lots of relevant opportunities on job boards. Here are some terms to consider using:
 - Remote
 - Work remotely
 - Work-at-home
 - Work at home
 - Work from home
 - Telecommuting
 - Telecommute
 - Virtual
 - Home-based
 - Location-independent
